Mike Refranc was the man who had taken care of the Italians" for Poley from the day "the Divvers" ran from the consequences of their own folling in making a joke of the Election Laws. That was back in 1906. Mike, this day in 1912, had come to Hheriff Foley in a mood which made him call his chief "Mr. Sheriff" and not "Tom." Tom Poley, smiling even more painstakingly than usual, tried to keep the trouble glaze out of his

I deserve it."

Foley turned away from him. "That's the trouble with you. Mike," he grunted. "You are too damn serious-about yourself. Go off somewhere and wake yourself up. Me turn down Dan for YOU? That's the trouble with you, Mike. You don't know what serious' means unless it is applied to vourself."

Right then and there began a blood tions and loss of work and suicides. Coney Island brawls and charges of ortea management of the counterfeiting United States coin met with charges of election frauds and kidnapping.

Out of it all chroniclers of under-world history mark two strange things. When an accident has lifted world history mark two strange things. When an accident has lifted a plank or a stone from over the crawling nests of underworld vermin, big or little, and sent them scurrying to cover or to capture or death, they have been found to have been busied over graft and women.

In this Rofrano-Foley feud, no matter which side may be judged to bear the final burden of guilt, there is no hint of a fight of men over a woman had made him a wise investor and he Special Entrance 35th St., Broadway excuse for the staring of one murderous battle.

There is no hint directly of graft, though, as an Assistant District Attorney said yesterday, "none of the direct participants in any part of the feud has ever laid himself open to what could be termed offensive or aggressive honesty."

"Brothers," he said with a grin, "I am at present a candidate for District Attorney on the platform that I shall try my cases, if elected, in court and not in the newspapers. And even if that were not the case, it would be wrong for me to cheapen a case as important as this case scens to be by exploiting it at a time when I was a candidate. The history of this case, now and hereafter, must be taken from the records, and I'll do my best to make the record clear and simple."

"I say on my responsibility as a public official and as an officer of this court," said Mr. Delehanty, with solemn emphasis, "that I oppose this motion because the conditions in this case more nearly concern the enforcement of the law in this cliy than even the conditions which culminated in the murder of the framan Rosenthal in July, 1912, by a Lieutenant of Police."

THE GAIMARI BROTHERS, HU-

MAN BLOODHOUNDS.

Of the elements of meiodrama the history of the feud lacks nothing. What shall be written hereafter, when Rofrano escapes or is captured by those two fraternal human bloodhounds, John—otherwise known as "Buster"—and Al Giamari, brothers of the man whose murder he is accused of having bought? These two were once on trial for their lives for the murder of a man who, as they believed, had tried to kill Mike Galmari, their brother. Since a second attempt on his life was successful they have been haunting the trail of Mike Rofrano, Rocco Carnivale, Frank Fennimore and Joe and Tony De Salle—sniffing, back-tracking, bulldozing, whining, but always, inch by inch, seeking to fulfil their desire for legal vengeance—for, as shall be told hereafter, they were stopped by the grim vigilance of the law from exercising their own inborn instinct for the vengeance of the vendetta.

Dec. 16, 1913, Mike Gaimari was stabbed in the back at Market and Catharine Streets at dusk. A slender, consumptive, thin haired, dark akinned fellow who leaped out of a doorway did it. Mike Gaimari's friend Murphy had to use both hands to pull the knife from the wound. But Mike Gaimari lived.

Three hours later two men shot of Madison and Chestnut Streets.

Tony La Salle was injured in the fight and caught at once by the police.
